HIGHLANDS & SPEYSIDE WHISKEY

In the HIGHLANDS region, there are differences in styles that can be divided into four types. The northern part of this region is known for the "coastal style," characterized by lighter, drier profiles with spicy notes and a subtle hint of salt. The central, eastern, and southern parts of the Highlands offer significantly sweeter, fruity characters.

In the SPEYSIDE region, there are 60 distilleries. The spirits from this region vary from floral and herbal tones to some sweet notes. They often mature in bourbon barrels, although they typically undergo further aging in other types of casks after that. Speyside whiskies are known for their relatively full body and pleasant character. Macallan would likely be their most recognizable representative. The legendary Macallan distillery, established in 1794 near the town of the same name, represents the western Speyside region, which features a mild smokiness not typically associated with this area.

ISLAY, ISLANDS, CAMPBELTOWN & LOWLANDS WHISKEY

The ISLAY region is home to eight well-known distilleries, with the most famous being BOWMORE, LAPHROAIG, and LAGAVULIN. Due to their proximity to the sea and the presence of iodine, these whiskies exhibit flavors of salt and seaweed. They have a very robust character, with peatiness being prominent in Lagavulin, Laphroaig, and Caol Ila, while Bowmore falls into the category of lighter malts. Kilchoman, a young distillery that began production in late 2005, is the newest addition to the Islay region.

In the ISLANDS region, distilleries from various smaller islands of Scotland are grouped together. There are seven such islands, and the most well-known among them are Talisker, Highland Park, and Scapa. Talisker, as the largest, offers intense smoky notes, while Highland Park has floral and sweet notes with a milder hint of smoke.

CAMPBELTOWN, located on the southwest coast of Scotland, was once known as the "whisky capital of the world." However, its popularity has waned, and today only three distilleries remain in this region.

The second-largest region in terms of area is LOWLANDS, which currently has only four distilleries, despite once having as many as 215. One notable characteristic of this region is that they triple-distill their whisky, earning them the nickname "Ladies of the Lowlands."

SCOTCH & BLENDED MALT WHISKEY

SCOTCH whiskey is distilled twice (in rare cases, three times) and must be aged exclusively in oak barrels for at least three years and one day. It is primarily divided into two categories: malt, made from malted barley, and grain, made from various types of grains and malted barley. Blended whiskey is created by blending grain and malt whiskey, which can include anywhere from 3 to 50 different individual whiskeys in one formula. Typically, "used barrels" are used for aging, which previously held bourbon, sherry, port, or Madeira. This is how the famous Scottish term "special finishes" came about, as the whiskey gains its character from the time it spends maturing.
Blended malt is a mixture of single malt whiskies from different distilleries.
Single Malt whiskey comes exclusively from one distillery, where it is produced using only barley as the grain.

IRISH AND AMERICAN WHISKEY

IRISH Whiskey matures in oak barrels for at least three years, and its triple distillation contributes to a much smoother taste.
Single malt is produced from malted barley. Single grain is made from a mixture of grains: barley, wheat, corn, and rye. Single pot is a combination of malted barley and raw barley and is produced in a distillery from a mixed mash. Blended Irish is a blend of grain and malt whiskey.
BOURBON originates from the Kentucky region. It contains a minimum of 51% corn as its primary ingredient, with the remainder being barley, rye, or wheat. It ages for a minimum of two years in new oak barrels, which are charred to some extent on the inside.
TENNESSEE Whiskey is similar to bourbon but differs in the filtration process. It undergoes filtration through sugar maple charcoal, giving the distillate a unique elegance and a subtle charcoal aroma. Rye whiskey is less sweet compared to bourbon and is made from rye (minimum 51%), offering a lot of spicy and intense flavors.

COGNAC & ARMAGNAC

Cognac is considered the finest grape distillate in the world, produced in the eponymous region. After distillation, it matures in oak barrels made from a specific type of wood. Allegedly, in the 16th century, Sevalie de la Croix heard a voice in his dream, advising him to distill his wine twice. Having done so, the barrels were entrusted to monks for safekeeping; one was consumed, and the other was kept for 15 years for special occasions, after which Cognac was born.

Armagnac is produced in the Armagnac region, south of Bordeaux, using the same grape varieties as Cognac, but Armagnac also uses the Baco grape variety. One of the main differences compared to Cognac is that it is distilled only once.

RUM

Rum is produced from sugar molasses obtained from sugar cane. It is first officially mentioned in the 17th century, although some theorists argue that it may have originated even earlier in Southeast Asia, where indigenous people chewed sugar cane and extracted its juice. Rum can be aged in former cognac, bourbon, whiskey, or sherry casks to enhance its flavor.

In addition to its historical ties to the Caribbean, rum also played a significant role in the maritime world. Sailors in the British Royal Navy were given a daily ration of rum, known as a "tot," which was later replaced with the term "proof." This practice led to the creation of the famous Navy rum, known for its high alcohol content and durability on long voyages. Rum also found its way into the famous cocktail, the "Daiquiri," which originated in Cuba and gained international fame, showcasing rum's versatility in mixology.

Furthermore, rum production involves a wide range of styles and variations, depending on factors such as the fermentation process, distillation method, and aging period. From the light and crisp white rums ideal for cocktails to the rich and aged dark rums meant for sipping, the world of rum offers an extensive array of options for connoisseurs and enthusiasts to explore and enjoy.

EMINENTE

RON DE CUBA

Growing up in the sugar cane fields, César Martí learned the craft from his grandfather, who was the director of a sugar processing plant. He was very close to him and watched him work closely. César Martí dedicated his career to the pursuit of the highest quality Cuban rum. In just nine years, Martí became the youngest Maestro Ronero in Cuba, an unparalleled feat to this day. In Cuba, Maestros Roneros are the guardians of the secrets of rum aging and blending, passing down knowledge from generation to generation. They are employed by the Cuban government, responsible for preserving and protecting the country's rum production traditions.

Eminente Reserva rum comes from Central Cuba, known locally as the "Island of the Crocodile." This island is home to over 3,000 indigenous species, including the Cuban crocodile. Eminente is intrinsically connected to the unspoiled nature of Cuba, from its bottle to its logo.Packaged in a striking glass bottle reminiscent of the crocodile skin from the famous Zapata Swamp, the largest natural habitat of crocodiles in Cuba. Each label is individually numbered.

Aged for at least 7 years in American white oak barrels that previously held whiskey. Eminente Reserva is a premium quality dark rum, aged for seven years, produced in Cuba from sugar cane, by blending two distillates with completely different production styles. The first distillate, full-bodied with 75% alcohol, matured in American white oak barrels and was then blended with lighter Cuban rum distilled at 96% alcohol, after which this blend undergoes further aging. With aromas of fresh cherries, dried fruits, vanilla, cinnamon, and dark chocolate, along with notes of roasted almonds, coffee, and tobacco. The taste is full, well-balanced, fresh, aromatic, and floral, with a light body, a touch of sweetness, spicy notes of pepper, caramel, dark chocolate, and coffee, with hints of ginger and smoke in the background. Eminente Reserva is made from 70% aged aguardientes, the highest proportion among all Cuban rums. Drawing inspiration from 19th-century Cuban rum, César Martí has brought renewed complexity to this Central Cuban rum by mastering the art of aging and blending aguardientes (Cuban molasses eaux-de-vie).

COCKTAILS

History of cocktails

The history of cocktails is a mix of claims and stories. The French claim to have invented cocktails by mixing champagne and brandy in the 19th century, calling it "Coquetel." However, the word "cocktail" first appeared in America in 1806, defined as a mix of strong spirits, sugar, water, liqueur, and bitters. The name "cocktail" is said to come from a rooster's tail, possibly inspired by a cockfight.

Jerry Thomas, a renowned bartender at the Metropolitan Hotel in New York, wrote the first published book on cocktails in the 1860s, titled "Bon Vivant's Guide, How to Mix Drinks." Harry Johnson followed with his own book on cocktails in 1882. These books helped popularize the art of mixing drinks.

DIMITRIJE
STEAK & PIZZA

Steak and Pizza Restaurant Dimitrije represents a confluence of diverse flavors, where your dining experience takes precedence.

Our story begins in the heart of Vračar, rooted in a profound love for gastronomy. Starting primarily as a pizzeria, we have evolved into masters of the craft in preparing this Italian specialty. Subsequently, steaks became our focus, and today, we proudly serve them in an exemplary manner.

Our mission is to ensure that every dish from our kitchen arrives at your table in exceptional form. For this very reason, we dedicate significant attention and effort to each and every culinary creation.
